Abstract

It is clear that the accounting profession seeks graduates that can communicate effectively. The Association to Advance Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB) has long emphasized the importance of communication skills in a business education, and more recently AACSB has focused on assessment of learning objectives in its accreditation processes. In addition, a writing component has been added to the uniform Certified Public Accountant (CPA) examination. As accounting and taxation professors, we know how to write; but can we teach others how we do it? This poster provides tips for teaching a writing class.
